

NCL rederiet slår på trumman att man nu gör nåt som man borde ha gjort för 20 år sedan, det har aldrig varit brist på kunskap men väl viljan att ta ett stort problem på allvar!

As part of continuing efforts to reduce the environmental impact of cruising, Norwegian has initiated an innovative recycling program at the Port of Miami. Recently, about 1,300 gallons of used cooking oil from the Norwegian Jewel and the Norwegian Pearl were donated to an organic farm in Vero Beach, FL, where it was converted into 870 gallons of bio-diesel fuel to be used in farming equipment.

All Norwegian ships in Hawaii have been recycling used cooking oil, and more than 40,000 gallons were converted to bio-diesel last year alone. Additionally, the cruise line runs ongoing residual oil recycling programs in Alaska, British Columbia, New York and Charleston.
